Grandma's Sword

👁 31 ✓ 2 ★ 5

Chapter 1 by Kennedy Jacobsen

The morning sunlight filtered through the window where it reflected off my grandmother's sword. I was visiting my grandma for the summer. My grandma was a professional sword fighter in her early ages. It was sun down when I found her sword from the World Championship that she used.

"Grandma I found your sword!" I yelled downstairs.

"Please do not touch it." Replied grandma.

"Don't worry I won't. Its very shiny and beautiful, I hope I will be like you when I grow up." I said.

"It just takes practice darling." She whispered back to me.

Chapter 2 by R

I've see Grandma use that sword. She moves slowly and afterwards she always complains about her back, but she's still deadly looking. She doesn't use it often but every summer there's always one day when I can watch her at work.

"I want to be a professional sword fighter too!" I said every year, and she looked at me with that look in her eyes of someone who had seen the world for what it is and not liked what they saw.

I wanted to be a sword fighter.

So on one dark July night, I crept down the stairs, and I picked up my Grandma's sword.

Chapter 3 by Jonnie Green- Movie Maker Jedi and Super Awesome Story Writer (P.S. This is a SECRET identity)

The next thing I knew, bright red blood dripped on the floor. A moment later I realized I must've been screaming, 'cause Grandma came running downstairs and pulled the sword out of my chest. Everything was black.

I woke and heard sirens, and realized that I was in an ambulance. My head hurt, my chest really hurt, my ears hurt, and my arm was hurting where the needle entered my vein.

I knew I was going to die, probably, but I wasn't sorry. The hilt of the sword had felt so good; so right, in my hand. I wanted to hold it again.
